

A Project for Alaskans, by Alaskans

The Pebble Partnership's Five Core Principles:

- 1 Pebble must benefit people—Pebble is for all Alaskans
- 2 Pebble must coexist with healthy fish, wildlife and other valued natural resources
- 3 Pebble must apply the world's best and most advanced science
- 4 Pebble must help build sustainable communities
- 5 At Pebble, we must listen before we act

Designing and permitting a mine is a long-term project. At the Pebble Partnership, we don't yet have all the answers to the challenges and opportunities we face.

That's why it's so important that we listen and actively respond to the concerns and priorities of local communities and all the state's residents. We know our project will only be supported if it protects those things that are important to Alaskans, and delivers real benefits that people want.

In 2008, we will launch a new, far-ranging process to engage with and listen to all stakeholders. We need your input to design the safest, most reliable project possible. And we must understand your goals and aspirations so Pebble can help advance them.

The Pebble Project is for all Alaskans, on land designated for resource development—and Alaskans have a rightful voice in its future.

"We will make sure that we have a comprehensive understanding of local concerns and interests, and work to address those in close partnership with stakeholders."

—Cynthia Carroll, CEO of Anglo American plc, one of two progressive mining companies of The Pebble Partnership
